Camels are well [adapted] to life in the desert. Many people think that a camel's hump is full of water, but it actually stores fat. When food is [scarce], the camel uses this fat for energy. Camels also have long eyelashes and can close their noses, so sand can't get into their eyes and noses during a [sandstorm], a strong wind that carries sand. Their wide, flat feet also help them walk on hot sand without sinking. Thanks to all these things, camels can cross the desert for days.
