Many students today rarely read books for fun. In my opinion, high schools should give students time every week to read books they choose.

First, reading for pleasure helps students build their vocabulary. According to the Example Reading Institute (2024), students who read for enjoyment for 20 minutes or more each day know more words than students who seldom read. Second, choice keeps students reading. As librarian Ms. Cho explains, “When students choose their own books, they are more likely to keep reading” (Cho, 2025). This shows that a reading period should let students pick their own books.

Some people argue that students can read at home. Admittedly, class time is valuable. Nevertheless, a survey of 400 students found that 62% have little time for reading at home (Example Survey, 2025). Therefore, school may be the only place where many students can read regularly.

For these reasons, a weekly reading period would help students become stronger and happier readers.
