When we watch a pianist play a difficult piece of music beautifully, it looks easy. Her fingers move quickly and lightly, and she seems to enjoy every moment. But what we see on the stage is only the top step of a long ladder. Before that five-minute performance, she practiced the same piece for months. She played slowly, made many mistakes, and repeated the hard parts hundreds of times. Nobody clapped for her during those long hours alone. The same is true for athletes, writers, and scientists. So when you see someone do something amazingly well, remember the many steps that you cannot see.

☐ a ladder that is used on a stage

☐ the final result of many hours of hidden practice

☐ a short and easy piece of music ☐ the moment when people clap
